Overview

The rooftop series was designed to speak directly to Gen. X & Y about how to accelerate their career prospects and capability in the field of project management.

Learning in rooftop sessions is about a point of view—a chance to look out across a landscape with a glass of wine and get direct advice; coaching and current information from people that have climbed career ladders inside professional services and continue to face challenges on larger and more complex projects around the world.

Feedback, and experience we've had suggests most training being received inside large firms by Gen X & Y is often purely technical and reactive - all about getting people productive in their current role. Demanding workloads and client pressure usually consumes all other work-time.

Plus, working 3,4,5 interstate or doing long hours inside busy project streams can make it hard to locate and access career mentoring; industry insights or professional services networks outside your firm.

We've assumed this audience:

- ◆ hates slow, boring training
- ◆ is hungry for information that prepares them for their next challenge
- ◆ is hungry to access learning from those who have been where they aspire to go
- ◆ enjoys coaching (when it isn't patronising or tries to hose down enthusiasm)
- ◆ Responds well to 'hothousing' - an accelerated way of getting what they need to know to move ahead.

Topics scheduled include:

- ◆ Accelerating your career in project management
- ◆ Secrets in surviving huge / global projects
- ◆ Project Management on the edge - the future of project management

New topics are designed regularly. Please check our schedule for details.
